Nothing about my experience at Brennan, Wasden & Painter could cause me to complain. I must admit that I fully expected to be assigned at least some mundane tasks (making copies, running errands, etc...), and of course still get some hands on experience in the legal field. However, it was very clear from day one, that Mr. Wasden and his staff did not wish to take advantage of what some might consider to be the perks of having an intern. Instead, each day of my employment was planned and structured so that I might gain maximum exposure to the realities of working as a lawyer. I was given my own office, and was able to travel with Mr. Wasden and other attorneys to depositions, court hearings, and the like. The rest of the staff (paralegals and secretaries) were incredibly helpful, kind, and thoughtful in assisting me with the work I was assigned in the office as well. There seemed to be a running joke amongst my employers, that this internship would "cure me" of my interest in the law. Yet I find now that my time at the firm has done quite the opposite, in fact my interest has only been greatly intensified. I found the work to be both grippingly interesting and rewarding. There is not a single aspect of my time at Brennan, Wasden & Painter LLC that I can fault, and if future interns are given the same opportunity that I was, I would ardently recommend that they do not let it pass them by.
